A FINAL

TO THE

REMARKS on the CRAFTSMAN's VINDICATION, &c.

 Γ is impossible to have read the Papers, which have been publish'd against the Writings of the Craftsman, and not have observed that one principal Point hath been laboured with constant Application, and fometimes with a little Art.

The Point I mean hath been This; to make all the Disputes about national Assairs, and our most important Interests, to pass for nothing more than Cavils, which have been raised by the Pique and Resentment of one Man, and by the Iniquity and dangerous Defigns of another. Nothing, which could be faid or done to inculcate this Belief, been been neglected. The fame Charges have been re-peated almost every Week, and the Publick hath been modeftly defired to pay no Regard to undeniable Facts, to unanswer'd and unanswerable Arguments, because these Facts and these Arguments were supposed, by the ministerial Writers, to come from Men, to whom these Hirelings ascribed, against all Probability, the worst Motives, and whose Characters They endeavour'd to blacken without Proof. Surely this Proceeding render'd it necessary, at least not improper, at the Conclusion of those Remarks, which were to conclude the Collection of the Craftsmen, to say some-thing concerning the Persons, who had been so particularly attack'd on Account of the Part, which They, who rail'd at them, were pleas'd to suppose that these Gentlemen had in the Writings, contain'd in that Collection. This, I fay, was necessary; at least proper; not in order to raise a Spirit, as it is impertinently suggested in the Libel, which lies before me; but to refute Calumny, and to remove at least some of those Prejudices, which had been raised, or renew'd, on the Occasion of these Writings, and which were employ'd to weaken the Effect of them; an Effect, which may be faid with Truth to have been aim'd at the * noble Pair of Brothers; fince it keeps up a national Spirit of Enquiry and Watchfulness, which it is the Interest of these Persons, as it hath been their Endeavour, to stifle; and which it is the Interest of every other Man in Britain to preserve in Himself, and to nourish in others; an Essect, which cannot be faid, without the greatest Untruth, to have been aim'd against the present Settlement; since the highest Insolence, which can be offer'd to his Majesty, is to attempt to blend his Interest and his Cause with Those of his unworthy Servants, as the Tools of these unworthy Servants are every Day employ'd to do, and probably at his Majesty's Expence.

Something was faid therefore by the Craftsman, in his Journal of the 22d of May, to the Purpose I have mention'd. If He went out of his Way, (for He ought most certainly to confine Himself to Things, and meddle with Persons as little as possible) He went out of it on great Provocation. He carry'd Truth and Reason along with Him; and He used a Moderation and a Decency, to which his Adversaries are strangers.

To fet this Matter in a full Light, let us consider what He said; let us consider how He hath been answer'd; and, by fairly comparing both, let us put the whole Merits of this Cause upon one short but decisive Issue. It will be Time afterwards to make a sew Observations on the Clamour rais'd; on the Reasons and Design of it; in a Word, to detect the mean Artistice and silly Expedients, to which the two honourable Patrons of the Remarker are reduced. In doing This, I shall neither affect to declaim, nor to inveigh, though I have before me an inexhaustible Fund of Matter for both, and the Law of Retaliation to bear me out. As I am persuaded the Men, I have to do with, can raise no Passion in the Person concern'd, so have I no need of endeavouring to raise the Passions of others.—But to proceed.

The Craftsman took Notice of those Accusations, which are brought against the Gentleman He mentions in the second Place——I meddle not with the Desence of the other, which hath been undertaken by an abler Pen——Some of These He answer'd in general only; and yet He answered them as particularly as He ought to have done for Reasons of Honour, which are touch'd upon by Him, and which shall be a little more open'd by me.

But there were other Points, not at all affected by these Reasons, on which no Explanation was necessary to be given by the Accused, and on which the Crastsman had a Right to demand Proofs from the Accusers. They were Points of a more determined Nature; such as admitted of no different Constructions; such as could not be altered by Circumstances. They were of a more publick Nature; such as the Men, who brought the Accusations, must have it in their Power to prove, if They were true; and such therefore as must be salse, if the Men, who brought the Accusations, were notable and ready to prove them.

On These the Crastsman instited. He affirmed Propositions directly contrary to the Accusations brought. He appealed to unquestionable Authority for the Truth of what He affirm'd; and to one in particular, which should have been treated with more Respect by the Remarker, since it will outweigh, at home and abroad, a thousand such Authorities as Those of his Patrons. He challenged all Mankind to produce one single Proof, in Contradiction of any one of these general Asymmations.

Was there any Thing unfair, or indecent in this Proceeding? Was there any Thing in it, which could provoke the Choler of Those, who are

Friends

Friends to Truth and Justice? If They, who brought these Accusations, had been such, an opportunity was presented to Them of convicting the guilty Man at the very Tribunal, before which his Cause had been pleaded. By producing Proof on these Heads, They had it in their Power to condemn Him upon all the Rest; and if this Part of the Charge was made good, the Opinion of Mankind would have been fairly enough decided as to the other.

Issue being join'd therefore in this Manner, the accused Person must be found guilty of all the Crimes laid to his Charge; or his Accusers must be found guilty of Slander, of Calumny, and of

fee what hath been faid in Answer to Him.

I pass over the many scurrilous Productions of those weekly, ministerial Scolds, who are hired to call Names, and are capable of little more. The elaborate Libel, intitled Remarks on the Craftsman's Vindication, seems to be the utmost Essort of their and their Patron's collected Strength; and tho' I have waited several Days to see if They had any more Scandal to throw out; yet I never doubted an Instant from what Quarter this remarkable Piece came into the World.

The whole Pamphlet is one continued Invective, and deferves no more to be called Remarks on the Craftsman, or an Answer to Him, than the Railing and Raving and throwing of Filth by a Madman deserve to be call'd an Answer to Those, who unwarily pass too near his Cell. All, that Malice could ever invent, or the Credulity of Parties, inflamed by Opposition, receive, is assembled. Truth is disguised by Misrepresentation, and even many Things, which the noble Pair know to be false, are affirmed as true.

But

But you will ask, perhaps, whether the Challenge is not accepted, and whether Proofs are not brought to contradict the plain and positive Affirmations made by the Craftsman? I answer, the Challenge is accepted, and the Remarker assures us that He hath brought Proof in numerous Instances against these Affirmations; which is the more generous, because the Craftsman exacted but one single Proof in Contradiction of any one of them.

The first of these Affirmations was, that the Gentleman concern'd never entered into Engagements, or any Commerce with the Pretender, till He had been attainted and cut off from the Body of his Majesty's Subjects—Let us examine the Facts, which We find scatter'd up and down in the Remarks, and which may be apply'd to prove, in Opposition to this Assirmation, what hath been so often anerted, that this Gentleman was a zealous Jacobite and an Agent of the Pretender, even in the Reign of the late Queen.

The first Fast of this kind is This. He left the Kingdom. His high Treason, among other Crimes, was confess'd by his shameful Flight.

Had the Libeller proved this high Treason, I might agree that the Gentleman's leaving his Country was a Consequence; but I can never admit that it is a Proof of his Guilt. Could no other Reason for leaving his Country be given, except his Guilt, his leaving his Country would be a strong Presumption against Him. But many other Reasons will soon occur to Those, who remember the Passages of that time; and Reasons there are of a more private Nature still, which would be very far, to say no more, from restecting Dishonour on a Step, which is called, by these foul-mouthed Advocates of Power, shameful and ignominious. One Thing it may be proper to assure them of, that they

they may pretend to mistake the Crastiman, and to misapply his Words no more. It is This. The Gentleman never declined a Contest with the two konourable Patrons of this Liles. One of them was, in those Days, below his Notice; and he ne-ver found, upon Trial, that he had Reason to apprehend being foiled by the other. But we mult not yet difinis this Article.

If the Proof we are examining proved any thing, it would prove too much. If to decline, in certain Circumstances, a Trial; if to go into voluntary Exile, either before a Trial, or even atter Condemnation, were absolute Proofs of Guilt, the Conduct of many greater and better Men than the Person now accused would deserve our Cenfure, and That of Calumniators, as vile asthele Libellers, would merit our Approbation. Metellus and Rutilius must be condemned. Apulcius and Apicius must be justified.

This fort of Proof therefore not appearing furficient to make good the Charge, that this Gentleman was engaged with the Pretender before his Attainder, great Pains are taken, and much Rhotorick is employ'd to shew, what we shall not prefume to contradict, that he ought not to have engaged in that Cause after his Att under. Neither did the Craftsman insist on this Circumstance as a Defence of the Person accused. He fixed this Date of the Engagements mentioned, in Contradiction to These, who had falsely affirmed that these Engagements were much more ancient. But He neither urged it as a Defence, nor pleaded it as an E_N cuse; and yet I am perfuaded that this very Circumstance had some Weight with his Lite Mijesty, when that excellent Prince, the Mildness of whose Temper, and the Clemency of whose Nature. В would have render'd him amiable in the most private Station, and made him almost adoreable in that great Elevation, to which the Providence of God had raised him; when that excellent Prince, I say, was pleased on his own Motion, and without any Application from the Person here spoken of, to extend his present, and promise his suture Fayour to him.

Tho' the Craftsman did neither fay, nor intend, what has been objected by the Remarker to him, yet he might perhaps mean something more than hath been observed; and if he did mean it, he hath been observed; and if he did mean it, he meant to inculcate, upon this Occasion, a very useful, general Truth. Let us grant that the Man, who engages against his Country, even when He has been oppressed in it, or driven out of it by Violence, is not to be defended; that these are Occasions, wherein we ought to kiss the Rod, which securges us, and reverence that Authority, which we think has been unjustly exercised against us. But then let it be granted likewise, that buman Passions are so strong, and buman Reason so weak, that Men, who suffer Persecution or who imagine they suffer it, are seldomable to keep within gine they fuffer it, are feldom able to keep within these Bounds of heroical Moderation. They will be apt to seize the Opportunities, which may be offer'd, of resisting, or of attempting to repair the Injuries done them. They will flatter Themselves, that they do not vow their Revenge against the People, the innocent and collective Body of their Countrymen, nor go about to survert the Constitution of the Govérnment. They will persuade others, nay they will persuade themselves, that they do not seek Revenge, but Redress; nor aim to destroy the Law, which punishes, but to prevent the Abuse of it, which persecutes. Thus will TATILITY will Men, who actually fuffer, be apt to reason; and if the Cafe be common to Numbers, they will be apt to proceed from reasoning on such Principles, to act upon them. Wise Governments therefore have been careful to diffinguish between Punishment and Persecution, and have never suffer'd the former, however just, necessary, or severe, to carry the least Appearance of the latter. Ludlow was justly punished. My Lord Clarendon, whom the Remarker hath so strangely yoaked with the Regicide, was unjustly, ungratefully and cruelly persective. cuted. We may pronounce, without Uncharitableness, that the former would have taken any Opportunity of subverting a second Time the Constitution of his Country; not from Resentment alone, but from Principle. The latter would have been moved by no Resentments to disturb that Frame of Government, which He had contributed fo much to restore. The former Example therefore hath nothing to do in this Place; and if I admit the latter, it will only serve to shew us how Men should act, not how they do act. It will be one Example of Virtue, opposed to innumerable Instances of Frailty. Innumerable, indeed, are the Instances of Men in all Ages, who having been driven out of their Country by Violence, have endeavour'd, ev'n by Violence, to return to it. This is the general and known Course of Nature; depraved indeed, but buman; and fince it is so; if we allow that They, who disturb a Government, because they think themselves persecuted, deserve no Excuse, we must allow that Those, who give Occasion to this Disturbance by Persecution, deserve very little.

I hope I may deferve fome for this Digression, into which the Remarker led me; and I return to my Subject, by saying that neither the Craftsman hath pretended, nor do I here pretend, to excuse the Engagements, which this Gentleman took, after his Attainder, and which his late Majesty so graciously pardoned; but that his taking these Engagements, after his Attainder, is no Proof that he was under them before; and that his going out of the Kingdom, in the late King's Reign, is no Proof that He was a zealous facobite, and an Agent of the Pretender in the late Queen's Reign.

The Libeller, finding himself unable to make this Charge good, leftens the Charge that He may fuit his Proof to it. If He cannot prove that the Gentleman was in the Interests of the Pretender, before his Aitsinder, He will prove at least that He had a strong Propension to those Interests; and how does He prove even This? He afferts that in the Year 1702. this Gentleman was one of the virtuous 117, who gave their Votes to throw out the Bill for settling the protestant Succession, &c. False and impudent Atlertion! A few Pages before He pretends to have the Journal Book of the House of Commons before Him. Had He it before him now? If He had, how could He affirm, in direct Contradiction to it? If He had not, how could He venture to affirm any thing, concerning this Matter? The Bill for fettling the protestant Succession, in the present Royal Family, pass'd the House of Commons in the Month of May 1701, not in 1702; and it pass'd nemine contradicente. In the Month of January following, Leave was given, nemine contradicente, to bring in a Bill for the farther Security of his Majesty's Person and the Succession of the Crown in the protestant Line, and exstinguisbing.

stinguishing the Hopes of the pretended Prince of Walcs, and all other Pretenders, and their open and secret Abettors. This Bill was accordingly brought in, and the Persons who, by Order of the House, prepared and brought it in, were Sir Charles Hedges and one Mr. St. JOHN. In the Progress of this Bill through the House, it appears that there were some Debates and Divisions about particular Clauses and Amendments; but the Bill was pass'd without any Division; so infamously false is the Assertion made by this Libeller, that there the Affertion made by this Libeller, that there was no Division of 117, or of any other Number, for throwing out either the Bill, which settled the Succession; or the Bill, which was made for the farther Security of it. There was a Division indeed, of 117 against 118, upon a Clause added by the Lords to a Bill, for inlarging the Time for taking the Oath of Abjuration, &c. and This happened in the year 1702; but what Relation hath this Fast to the Fact afferted? Whether the Gentleman voted against this Clause, or not. I am uptleman voted against this Clause, or not, I am unable to say; and it is to no purpose to enquire; for the Clause regarded only such Persons as had neglected to take the Abjuration Oath in Time, and provided that if such Persons had forscited any Office, Benefice, &c. to which any other Person had been preferr'd, the former should not be restored by taking the Advantage of this Act. If this pretended Proof therefore is not another Instance of the vilest Calumniation, I know not what is; and if This is vile Calumniation, the Libeller himself confesses that the Craftsman's Challenge was properly made; and that there is not one Proof in the World against his general Affirmations.

Another Fact, which is advanced and most parthetically declaimed upon, for Reasons not hard to be discover'd, is likewise applied to maintain the fame Charge. This Gentleman, fays the Libeller, had the Impudence to oppose his present most sacred Majesty, when He demanded a Writ of Right-The Writ of Summons to Parliament. He afterwards caused the Elector of Hanover's Minister to be forbid the Court, for no other Crime than having demanded that Writ. And did this Gentleman oppose this Writ? Nay, did any other Servant of the late Queen oppose it? False and Impudent is the Assertion. It was ordered to be made out the very Day * it was demanded. If the Minister, who demanded the Writ, was forbid the Court, was this Gentleman the cause of it? Is every disagree-"able Circumstance to be ascribed to him in an Atlair, which was too important not to be laid, by the proper Minister, that is by the Chancellor, not the Secretary, before her late Majesty and her Council; and in which it may be supposed that her Majesty's Resentments were alone sufficient to determine such a Resolution? Besides, if the Minister received the Affront mentioned, was it fingly and abstractedly for demanding the Writ; or was it founded on the manner of demanding, and on many other Circumstances, some expressed and some hinted at in the Letters, writ soon afterwards by the late Queen to her late Electoral Highness the Princess Sophia, and to his present Majesty, which lye before me in the printed Annals of Queen Anne's Reign? Was the Reception, given by his late Majesty, then Elestor, to the Minister, who made this Demand, at his return home, such a one as shewed his Majesty's Approbation of this Measure, and his Disapprobation of what had happen'd here upon it? — I say no more.

We have now gone thro' all I can find in this Libel, which feems so much as to aim at making good the first Head of Accusation, on which the Craftsman made his Challenge.

On the second Head, the Crastsman affirmed that the same Gentleman never had any Commerce either direct or indirect, inconsistent with the Engagements He took after his Attainder, whilft He continued in them. Now, this Affirmation, instead of being disproved, is evaded. It is foreign to me, says the Remarker—Is it so?——Have not all his scribbling Associates charged this Gentleman over and over for being treacherous to the Pretender; for being engag'd with Him; and at the same time a Spy and a Partisan, such is the Language they use, of the late King? Is not the flat Contradiction given to this Lye a Part of the Challenge made by the Craftsman? Hath not this Libeller accepted the Challenge? Hath He not called it a weak, a foolish and a flavish Defence? May He evade it after all his boasting? Is He not bound to make it good in every Part, or to own the Charge of Calumny, which I make on Him, on the whole feribbling Crew, and on Those, who pay them? What He, or They will own, I neither know nor care. What the Publick will determine is evident.

On a third Head of Accusation against this Gentleman, tleman, the Craftsman affirm'd, that since he was out of the Engagements last mentioned, He hath had no Commerce, either direct or indirect, in favour of that Cause. Now, upon this Head, tho' the Accufation be not given up in Terms, yet is it as little maintain'd, or supported by Proof as the last. The Libeller, indeed, calls the Gentleman a Leviathan of Treason; displays the terrible Dangers, which would have attended the reinstating him; presumes to call it a Libel on the late King's Memory to fay that He had such Intentions; and yet dares not deny that his Majesty signified his having such Intentions. In short, with much Bombast, He makes the Panegyrick of his Patron, for defeating these Intentions. I shall not condescend to make one fingle Remark on this Rhapfody of Scurrility and Adulation. Such Poylon carries it's Antidote along with it into the World; and no Man will be at a loss to judge whether publick, or private Motives determin'd the Servant, in this Case, to defeat the Intentions of the Master. Which ever they were, He, who can believe that the Gentleman so often mention'd has upon him any of that Obligation, which the Craftsman disclaims for him, deserves to be pitied; and He, who can bring himself up to affirm it, deserves to be despised. But before I leave this Article, it may not be improper, nor unfeafonable to enquire, by what Criterion good Subjects to his Majesty and faithful Friends to the present Establishment are to be distinguished and known. Are all Those to be reputed such, who assumed the greatest Zeal for the protest ant Succession formerly? -- This cannot be; for many of the Tories have this Title; and all, who ever wore that Name, are proscribed by the System we have seen advanced—Are all These to be

be reputed such, who were alike zealous for the Protestant Succession, and who have besides made constant Profession of the Principles of Whiggifm? These are daily stigmatized with the reproachful Names of Milecontents and Incendiaries; and fince Endeavours are used, by faise Deductions and by arbitrary Interpretations, to prove them Enemies to the Government, and in Effect arrant Traitors.—What is this Criterion then? I am able to discover but one, and it is This; being for, or being against the noble Pair of Brothers, the two honourable Patrons of the Remarker. Without the Merit of approving their Conduct, no Man is to be reputed a faithful Subject, or a Friend to his Country. With this Merit, and with That of a blind Submission, even They, who have been the most obnoxious, may be received; and They, who have been called Enemies to the Government, as loudly as any others, may be inrolled among its Friends. This Practice of endeavouring to confine the Interest of the Government to as narrow a Bottom as That of two Ministers, has been of late most audaciously pursued. It has been said in direct Terms * that if his late Majesty had put the Administration into any other Hands, He would have been unjust to those brave Men, who had done and suffer'd so much to serve kim; and that He would not have deserved to wear the Crown, if He had not employ'd the Men, whom He did employ .--- Here, again, there might be room for fome particular Reflections, if I was disposed to make them. But I avoid this invidious Part as much as my Subject will allow me to do; and shall therefore content my self with desiring these bold Writers, their Inspectors, and Patrons, to confider what the necessary Confequences of fuch Positions are. If they dare to affert that his late Majesty would have been unjust; that He would not have deserved to wear the Crown, if He had not employed the Men He did employ; what might they not affert if his present Majesty should, at any Time, think fit, in his great Wifdom and Goodness to his People, to remove some of those very Men, whom his Royal Father did employ? The Assertion is not even extended to Party. It would have been still indecent if it had. But it is confined to a certain Number of particular Men; as if the Zeal for the Protestant Succession in the present Royal Family had not been directed, as it most certainly was, to the national Advantage, but had been intended, as to be sure it was not, for the Advantage of particular Men, and to perpetuate the Administration in a private Family. 'This is fuch Language, as I believe was never held before, and as no Man would prefume to hold now, if the Encouragement to it did not proceed from Those, by whom it should be discountenanc'd and punished.

There is another Fast, which I must not omit to take Notice of in this Place; because though it is not one of Those, on which the Crastsman made his Challenge, yet it hath been positively afferted by Him, and half of it at least as positively deny-ed by the Remarker.

The Craftsman said that the Mercy of the late King was extended to the Gentleman, we speak of, unask'd and unearn'd. That it was unearn'd, the Remarker thinks probable; and in thinking so He gives gives the Lye to all his Fellow-Scribblers, who have to often affirmed the contrary. That it was unask'd, He fays, is a downright Falihood. He hath the Journal-Book of the House of Commons before Him; and there He finds that the House was acquainted, by his late Majesty's Command, in April 1725, that this Gentleman had, about feven Years before, made his kumble Application and Submission, Sc. which his Majesty so far accepted as to give Encouragement to hope for some future Mark of his Majesty's Favour and Goodness.—In This He exults; but here again the Effrontery and Fulfood, which He charges on others, will recoil on Himfelf. Who drew this minifeerial Meffage I know not; nor how far the Style of it may be necessary, according to the Forms usual on such Occasions; but the Remarker might have known, if He had confulted even his Patrons, that his Majesty's Mercy had been extended to this Gentleman two Yeare before the feven there mentioned; and that this Mercy did not confift in Encouragement to hope for fome future Mark of his Majesty's Favour and Goodnefs, but in a gracious and absolute Promise of his Favour in the full Extent, which the Circumstances of that Gentleman required. I may be the more bold in affirming this Fact, because the noble Lord, who delivered the Message I quote, is still alive, as some other Persons are, to whom his late Majesty was pleas'd to own that this Message had been deliver'd by his Order, and to express his gracious Intentions conformably to it—But to proceed.

It appears most underiably that of the three Heads, on which the Craftsman gave, and the Remirker accepted, the Challenge, the Remarker hath shown Himfels unable to prove the first by any true Fass, and buth scandalously attempted to do it by fulfo ones; that He hath given up the fecond; and that He hath not so much as attempted to prove the third.

Let me ask now, shall Men, thus plainly convicted of Calumny on Accufations brought fo often and charg'd so peremptorily by them, expect Belief, when They endeavour to detaine in any other Cafe? Shall They, who are convicted of accusing falfely in Cases, which are plain in their Nature, where no Proof can be wanting, and where no Pretence can be alledg'd for not producing it, expect that the Publick should condemn any Man, and especially a Man, who is under so many Circumstances of Disadvantage, peculiar to his fingular and unexampled Situation, because They affirm Him guilty in Cases, which are intricate in their Nature, and where Reasons of Honour, of Prudence and of Decency may all concur to impose Silence? How often have the noble Pair defended Themselves, and been defended by others, on this Principle; that no Man ought to charge another, unless He is able and ready to prove the Charge? How often have They call'd for Proof on this Principle, and triumph'd that it was not immediately brought? Now, alchough this Defence may not be sufficient in every Case, where Matters of present Transaction are concerned, and where the Persons attacked are in actual Possession of the greatest Power; yet surely it may be thought, with Reason, to be a sufficient Desence, when Matters long ago transacted, and long ago censured too, are concerned; when the Perfoils, who attack, are in actual Possession of the greatest Power; and the Person, who is attack'd, hath none of those offenfive, or defensive Weapons at his Command, which Power furnishes in so abundant a Manner. The

The Remarker thinks that no Reasons of Honour, Prudence, or Decemby ought to fout the Mouth of Innocence; that Shame and Guilt alone are filent in the Day of Enquiry—When this Day of Engury is to come, and who is to be the Subject of it, I know not; but let Him learn that there are many Cales, wherein it is not koneft, and many others may occur wherein it is not prudent, to fay all that night be faid either in Defence, or in Excuse; that is, when the Defence or Excuse of our selves must affect ethers, not concern'd in the Debate. In fuch Cales, the most innocent will rather bear the Imputation of imaginary Crimes, by keeping Silence, than be guilty of a real Crime, by breaking it; and to carry This as far as it can be carryed, Initances might be produc'd of Men, who have dyed, rather than accuse others, whose Blood was thirsted after more than Theirs.

Much hath been faid, and great Complaints have been made, of the Torture, as it is called in this Libel, given to another Gentleman's Actions. If, by This, be meant ranfacking into all the private and publick Patlages of his Life, and wrefting every one into a Crime; far be it from me to approve, in his Cafe, what I abhor this Libeller for doing in the Case of another. But is it really so? Have we feen Accusations of Treachery and Ingratitude towards feveral, who are dead, and towards any, who are living infifted upon, in the former Case? Has it been reproached to the Patrons of the Remarker, that they worm'd out of Power a Person, to whom They were nearly allied and ought to have been firmly attach'd by Gratitude and Friendship? and yet is That a Subject, which affords nothing to be faid? Are there no Circumstances, which might be aggravated at least? Are there no strong Colours, which might be laid? Even

Even I should not be at a Loss to do it, if I thought it fair to do it; if I thought it honest to push any Man to a Silence, of which I might take a seeming Advantage, or to a Necessity of justifying or excusing himself by saying what, supposing him innocent, he ought not to say. Are there no Facts relating to former Transactions of great Importance not commonly known, and yet not absolutely Secrets, which remain still unmention'd?

—In short, is it not apparent that there are Men, who accuse, indeed, when the immediate Subjest of Debate leads, or provokes them necessarily and unwillingly to it, whilst there are others, who wait for no such Necessity, but accuse meetly to defame.

It would be tedious, not difficult, to go thro' this whole Investive; to deny with Truth many Things, which are falfely affirmed; and, by giving a just Turn to others, to set them in a very different Light from That, wherein the Author exposes them to publick View; to explain what He perplexes; to distinguish what He consounds. But I shall not take this Task upon Me, for the Reasons I have given and for others, which I am going to

As to the Conduct, which the Person, against whom such Torrents of Ribaldry are pour'd forth, held towards Those, who were at the Head of Affairs, whilst He was in Business, Ishall only add to what hath been said already, what no Man of Candour will deny; that the Heat and Animosity, which perpetual Contests and frequent Turns of Party raise, have carried many (perhaps, the Person, who is blamed; perhaps, the Persons, who blame him) to do, what in any other Situation, or Temper of Mind, They would carefully avoid; in a Word, that the just Man hath been, on such Occasions, sometimes unjust; the good-natur'd Man ill-natured; and the friendly Man unfriendly. Few there are, I fear, who could with a safe Conscience take up the first Stone upon such a Trial. Few there are, who are blameless. But here is the Difference. The just, the good-natured, the friendly Man returns to the Character, out of which He started. The unjust, the ill-natur'd, the unfriendly Man persists. The sirst reslects with Sorrow on what the last reslects with Triumph; and whilst one wishes undone what the Heat of Party carried Him to do, the other is glad of the Excuse of Party, such as it is, to include the viciousness of his own Nature, and to repeat unjust, ill-natur'd and unfriendly Actions to the living and even to the dead.

There is an Example before us, which may ferve to illustrate what I have faid. Great Advantage is taken of a Memorial sent to the late Queen, by the late Earl of Oxford, wherein many hard Reflections are made on others; but the hardest of all on the Person here referred to. He is painted in the worst Colours, and accused to the Queen of the greatest Faults. Should I descend into the Particulars, I might shew that the Accusations were groundless, and point out, perhaps, the unjust Causes of Suspicions, which were taken, as well as the Motives to the writing that Memorial, which I wish had never been written for a Reason very different from That, which the Remarker would be ready to assign. But I shall not descend into any fuch Particulars, nor give a double Advantage to the Malicious, who would be just as well pleas'd to have any Handle given them by the living of inveighing against the dead, as They are ready to feize, on every Occasion, That, which

which was given them, fo many years ago, by one, who is now dead, of inveighing against the living.

The Perfons, who had the Honour to serve the Lite Queen, in the last Period of her Lite, have been these twenty Years the Subjects of great Clamour. If the Differences, which happen'd amongst them so long ago, gave in some Measure; as I apprehend that They did, both occasion and Force to this Clamour, it would be strange Conduct, indeed, in Those of them, who remain alive, and in the Relitions and Friends of Those of them, who are déad, to preserve this Spirit of Difference, and to assist in reviving this Clamour.

The Day will come, when authentick History will relate the Passages of those Times, without Regard to the partial Views of any Party, or the particular Desence of any Man. 'I ill this Day does come, every one must decide, or suspend his Judgment, as He sees Reason to do, and They, who may suffer by these Judgments, must bear it with that Temper and Respect, which is due from every private Man to publick Censures; nay, even to publick Prejudices.

But what hath all This to do with the Characters and Conduct of the noble Pair? Suppose the Men in Power, two Reigns ago, to have been Angels of Darkness; will it follow that the two honourable Patrons of the Remarker are Angels of Light? What then is the Meaning of fo great a Clamour, affectedly raised on so slender an Occasion as the Crastisman of the 22d of May gave; wherein little was said, and that little with much Moderation, after much Provocation? Why are so many Pens employed, and so great Pains taken, to divert the Attention of the Publick from present to past Transactions; from national Considerations to personal

Sonal Altercations? — The Reason is obvious; and no other Reason in Nature can be assigned. The noble Pair have been hard push'd, on their Management of publick Affairs, both at home and abroad. Not only their Errors have been pointed out; gross, palpable Errors; but a long Series of Error; a whole System of cool, deliberate, conducted, defended, expensive Error hath been laid open to publick View. What I believe never to have happened before, hath happened on these Occasions. The noble Pair have been admonished in Time, and shewn the Precipice, into which, whoever led, They were both falling. The Confequences of their Measures have been foretold as early as possible, and even whilft the Caufes were laying. Surely this Conduct, on the Part of their Adversaries, savours more of publick Spirit than of private Refentment; and yet, when They have taken Advantage of it, They have stopt short and triumph'd in their Escape, as They did in the Case of the Irish Recruits. These very Admonitions, which gave Them Time and Opportunity to do fo, have been modestly attributed to private Resentment alone; though nothing can be more manifest than This; that private Resentment would have found its Account better in Silence; would have prefer'd Accusations to Admonitions, and would have waited longer to have struck more home.

Sometimes, instead of stopping short, They have gone on, answering for and being answered for, till the Events have justify'd the Predictions; till the Inconveniencies, Disadvantages and Dissiculties, against which the noble Pair had been warn'd in vain, have followed and increased upon them; till even their Apologists have been forced to allow some Errors, and till They Themselves have consess'd their boasted System to be wrong, by changing it, and by boasting of the Change. Even after all This, They have complained of Clamour; and They still complain, as if there had never been the least Occasion for it given by Them.—How their new Schemes are plann'd, and how They will be pursued; whether these able Men have fail'd hitherto, because They set out on mistaken Principles of Policy, or whether They have failed for want of Skill to conduct the rightest, We shall soon see.

But These are not the only Circumstances, which have born, and still bear hard upon Them. -In the Course of These and other Disputes, it seems to have been plainly and fully proved that fuch Principles have been established, and fuch Doctrines have been taught by the ministerial Writers, as tend manifestly to destroy the Freedom of the British Government. Such are the Dependency (I mean the corrupt Dependency) of Parliaments on the Crown; the Necessity of standing Armies, notwith-thanding the Danger of them to Liberty; and some other Points, which I need not recapitulate. It is fufficiently known how much, and with how much Reason, the far greater Part of Mankind have been alarmed at these Attempts; which, if They fueeced, must hurt not only the inferior and temporary Interests, but the greatest and most permanent, political Interest, which a Briton can have at Heart; That of the Constitution of this Government.

As these Things have been objected strongly on one Side, so Endeavours have been used on the other, to disguise and to palliate them, or to evade the Consequences drawn from them. But these Landeavours have not succeeded. How, indeed, should they succeed? As well might Those, who make them, expect to persuade Mankind that Slavery and Beggary are preserable to Literty and Wealth, as to make the World believe that these Blessings can be preserved to Britain by the very Means, by which they have been lost in so many other free Countries.

Since This therefore cannot be imposed; fince the Minds of Men cannot be convinced of fuch Abfurdities, they must be diverted, if possible, from the Subject. A new Cry is therefore raised, or an old one rather is revived. Disputes, which inflamed the Minds of Men, whilst the Affairs they relate to were transacting, and the Conflict of Parties was the most fierce, are renewed at a Time, when they can be of no Benefit to the Publick, and when the fame Motives of Party fublish no longer. One Man, in particular, is made the Subject of new Invective. Nothing, which Malice can fuggett, and ill Nature and ill Manners utter, is omitted to render his Person odious, and to represent his Designs as dangerous. In the same Breath, we are told that this odious, this dangerous Man is endeavouring to come into Power once more. He stands again a Candidate for Grace and Trust. He would again administer the Publick, abandon its Allies, and facrifice its Honour. Nothing will fatisfy him but the Power, which He once abused and would again abuse; the Trusts, which He once betrayed and would again betray. These are represented, with equal Modesty and Fairness, to be his Requests; and the Hero of the Remarker, that is the Remarker's Psymaster, who administers the Publick so rightcously; who never abandon'd its _stllies; neither the Emperor nor France; who never facrificed its Honour to one, nor it's Interest to D 2

both; who never abused his Power, nor betrayed his Trust, through Ambition, through Pride, through private Interest, or private Pique; this Person is applauded for his Opposition to such Requests for his just and fatal Discernment.

What Fatality there may be in his Discernment, I know not; but furely there is a Fatality, which attends Those, who indulge themselves in speaking and writing, without any Regard to Truth. How could it happen else that the Remarker should so egregiously contradict himself, and destroy in his 40th Page the whole Drift of his 39th? This bold and rash Scribbler takes upon him to marshal and to characterize infolently the Friends of the Man He rails at. If I was not of that Number my felf, I should probably say more on the Subject. This however I am under an Obligation to fay; that the Friends of this Gentleman must be fuch to his Person. They cannot be so to his Power. That He takes it as the greatest Compliment, which can be made him, to have a Sympathy of Nature and a Conformity of Principles and De-Jigns with them, attributed to him; that He thinks their Friendship an Honour to him; such an Honour as the warmest of his Enemies have Cause to envy, and do envy; fuch an Honour as the highest of his Enemies would be heartily proud to obtain, and have not been able to obtain.

The Friends now of this Gentleman, whom he is fometimes faid to lead, and who are fometimes faid to employ him as their Tool, just as it suits the present Purpose of Scandal to say; these very Friends, it seems, the very Men who desend him, would never raise him above his present low Condition, nor make him the Partner of their Success.—However they may employ him, the Remarker and his Patrons

Patrons know how they mean to reward him.— Since This is the Case, since they know it to be so; for what Reason, in the Name of Wonder, is all this Bustle made about so insignificant a Tool?—Why so many Endeavours to raise a Jealousy, and give an Alarm, as if this Man was aiming again at Power?—Why so much Merit ascribed to the noble Pair, for keeping him out of it?—His own Friends would not raise him to it—How ridiculous then is the Assectation of his Enemies, who value themselves on their Opposition to him?

Let the noble Pair stand or fall by their own Merits, or Demerits. I dare answer to them and to the World, upon better Foundations than Those of the Remarker's laying, that their Continuance in Power will never break the Spirit of this Man, nor their Fall from it excite his Ambition. His Ambition, whatever may have been faid or thought about it, hath been long fince dead. A Man must be dead himself, who is utterly insensible of all that happens, either to the Publick or to Himfelf; but He, who feeks nothing but Retreat, and that Stability of Situation, which is effential to the Quiet of it, hath furely no Ambition. Now that This is the Case, and hath been long the Case of the Gentleman, concerning whom I speak, I know to be true, and I affirm boldly. He never had the least, I say more, He never would have the greatest Obligations to any Country, except his own; and yet so desirous was this Man of Rest and Quiet, that He was contented to enjoy them where Fortune had presented them to Him. A little Frankness might have kept him alroad all his Life, without Complaint. Much Art has been employed to confine him at home, and to teaze him there. If, forgetting forgetting all former Persecutions, He resented the lass, would he be much to blame?

I am not conscious of having said, in this Paper, a Word against the Truth; and I am fure that i have the fame Truth on my Side, when I affert that this Man, whom the L. eller represents to be so turlulent, so outragious, and or such pertinacious Ambition, however He might has been thing formerly to have had the Obligation of Pair of enjoying, by their i fliftance, the tun meafure of his late Myoth ' inter led Good ofs, would decline with Scorn, after all that has paned, to e reinstated in his former Situation, at the unter-rable Expence of having the least Appearance of an Obligation to Them. Seither They, nor their Advocates, can be half so follicitous to keep him out of Power, and even out of a State of afpiring after Power, as he is determin'd against the first, and indifferent about the last.

I am fentible that all This may appear a little improbable to the Perjons I oppose. It will be hard for Them to conceive that the Man, who has once taited Power, can ever renounce it in earnest. No wonder They should think in this Manner. These, who find nothing in Themselves to rest upon with Satisfaction, must lean on Power, on Rickes, or both, and on other external Objects. Nay, Those, who have of the two Vices, Ambition and Avarice, the meanoff in the most eminent Degree; and who would be glad to quit their Power, and to retire with their Gains, may be afraid to quit it, because they have abused it. They may be so misserable as to see no Security out of Power, nor any other in it, except that precarious, that temporary Security, which is the last and usual Resuge of desperate Men; the continuing the fame Violences to maintain, by which they acquired the Power: the keeping up of Differtions, and the embroiling of Affairs; those noble Arts, by which they rofe.

- But there are Men in the World, who know that there is fomething in Life better than Power, and Riches; and fuch Men may prefer the low Condition, as it is called by the Remarker, of one Man, to the high Condition of another. There are Men, who fee that Dignity may be differed, and who feel that Difgrace may be dignified. Of this Number is the Gentleman, whom I have undertaken to defend; who possesses his Soul without Hopes or Fears, and enjoys his Retreat without any Defires beyond it. In that Retreat, He is obedient to the Laws, dutiful to his Prince, and true to his Oaths. If He fails in these Respects, let him be publickly attacked; let publick Vengeance purfue and overtake him; let the noble Pair indulge for once their Passions in a just Cause. If they have no Complaints, of this Nature, to make against him, from whence does this particular Animolity proceed? Have they Complaints of any other Kind to make, and of a private Nature? If they have, why is the Publick troubled on this Account? - I hope the Remarker's Mask is now taken off; that the true Drift of all this personal Railing is enough exposed; and that the Attention of Mankind will be brought back to those more important Subjects, which have been already flarted, and to Thofe, which every Day may furnish.

After what has been here fuid, the Gentlem in, in whose Desence I have appeared, can have no Reason of Honour to enter by Hendelf, or his Friends, into these Altereations; and if my Opinion can prevail, should these Libellers continue to scold and to call Names, They should be left to do it, without Reproof, or Notice. The Answer now given should stand as a final Answer to all They have said, and to all They may think fit to say hereafter.
